A Farmer's View of the Situation.

The great question which is now the leading one with my brother farmers is this: How can we manage to get more and save more, to enable us to live as easily and accumulate as much money as the average tradesman, mechanic, stockholder, or professional man? Can we do it by commencing at once to look out for number one, just as the non-producing classes are invariably in the habit of doing? The time has come when the farmer, who has heretofore quietly aided in the development of the country, and who has cared little to know by what combination those who followed other occupations in a few years amassed princely fortunes, begins to see that the prosperity that he witnessed must have originated to a great extent in the comparatively low price that he received for the products of his labor, and the relatively high price that he had to pay for everything that he was compelled to use. He never dreamed that he was as much entitled to protection as the manufacturer. Hereafter the farmers intend to see about this little matter of protection, and to know why the several millions who follow the plow should not be as well protected as the few thousands of manufacturers whose proximity to the national capital enables them to lobby through whatever protective scheme they undertake. The unrepresented farmer who has heretofore quietly submitted to the powerful combination of capitalists will do so no longer. The leaves of progress are at work. Farmers are becoming unified. They are determined to think and act for themselves. Western farmers are financially embarrassed, and not one in a thousand will say that he is getting five per cent. on his investment. Farmers do not want the consumer to pay more than a fair price for what he gets, but they do want the pork and grain gamblers to go to work like honest men, and with hands brown with toil, earn what they eat and wear. As we before said, the time has come for the farming class to look out for number one; that is, more for themselves and their interests. In order to do this they must organize, and then work together for the common good of all. The farmer of the future is to be better educated in the line of his profession. He is yet to become a believer in statistics. He will soon appreciate the value of crop statistics, and will inform himself just as the speculator does now, as to the amount of the grain supply. This, in connection with a still more complete system of crop reports, will enable the farmer to know as much about the true condition of the market as the speculator himself. Then we may naturally expect to see farmers' union grain elevators, so managed that temporary advances can be made on grain in store, and a better average price obtained for cereal crops. We do not expect, however, a single reform to do all that is required for the relief of the farmer. In granges and clubs other methods of relief will be carefully discussed, and adopted with a unanimity that will insure success. With this will come confidence and enterprise. Money will seek an investment outside of incorporated cities, and general prosperity will ensue. It is not unreasonable to hope that, with the increased facilities now offered to the farmer for acquiring information on general subjects pertaining to the welfare of the great agricultural public, men having this leading interest at heart will yet assume a controlling power in the enactment of laws that will benefit the farmer as well as other classes, and thus guarantee to the country continued, unvarying prosperity.—Cr. Rural World.

How They Read the Papers.
Uncle Ned first hunts up a funny thing, then laughs with a will. Aunt Sue first reads the stories, then turns to the marriages and deaths. The laborer looks at the wants, hoping to find a better opening in his business. Miss Flora seeks out the new advertisements to ascertain the newest importations in bonnets and kids. Mr. Plowse-er turns to the amusement advertisements and decides what entertainment will afford him the most enjoyment. Miss Prim drops a tear—first over the marriages, then over the deaths; for she says one is as bad as the other. Mr. Politician reads the editorials, then the political extracts and news. Mr. Marvellous looks for the accidents, murders, inquests and deaths, and ends in stories of something sensational. Everybody reads the advertisements to learn who are the energetic business men, and learn where they can find what they want.

WONDERFUL INVENTION.

A Book to Jeopardize Bogardus's Patent Irresistible Combination Kicker.
To the Editor of the Interior Journal.
I have invented a machine for the purpose of reducing the number of exchange funds now in existence. As many of your exchanges know, exchange funds are persons of great perseverance who continually drop into a room where the exchanges of a newspaper office are kept, and wrestle with them under the pretense of searching for the Daily Star, Francisco Crusader, or the West Weekly Bulletin, or some other sheet that they offer to swap they can't find at the news stands. These persons, as if their presence alone was not sufficiently harrowing, have a way of sitting for at least half an hour at a time, rattling the papers in the exchange basket in a manner evidently intended to exasperate and confuse every one at work within range of the noise. They do worse. When one of them is informed that the paper wanted is not to be had, he invariably says, "An old one will do just as well," and his howl darkens with unmanly suspicion when he is told that the paper he wants has positively been carried out. These persons also make tedious and unnecessary explanations, consuming much valuable time and wearing out the patience. They know everything that's disagreeable, and practice it persistently. All their faults, if written of here, would make this thing too long.

The invention to which I refer is known as "Bogardus's Patent Irresistible Kicker," for the use of Newspaper Offices; and it is in every respect superior to the burr-saw now in use in some of the Western newspaper establishments. It consists mainly of—first, a large, strongly-constructed chair, in the bottom of which are concealed numerous remarkable springs of extraordinary power; second, an immense boot, made of a hard, unyielding substance, and connected, beneath the floor, with the chair; third, a number of strong rods and things connecting the whole with the steam engines of the establishment. The boot and chair are also connected with a powerful book, which is concealed in the ceiling.

As the unsuspecting exchange fund approaches, he is requested to be seated in the chair, which is placed close to the basket in which the exchanges are kept. Just as he settles in the seat and reaches for an exchange, a member of the editorial staff suddenly jerks a convenient knob; the powerful and wonderful springs in the chair begin to toss the fund in a most extraordinary manner; a portion of the floor slides away, and the immense boot swings into view, making a kind of crashing noise, as though the building were falling. In a few seconds more the remarkable springs, true to their task, throw the astonished fund in a position which makes him face the door. The concealed book then drops from the ceiling and seizes him by the coat-collar, and then the boot, with the rapidity of lightning, is put where it will do the most good.

When the boot has gone rapidly back and forth for about half a minute, the machinery is stopped, the shattered fund is lowered to a litter and carried out, and for six weeks he languishes under the impression that he has been assaulted from behind by the tutelary demon of the press, or some equally exasperated monster too hideous to describe. He never returns to the exchange basket.

The patent irresistible kicker is very effective, and has been known to shatter one of Dr. Harding's celebrated interviewing cushions at one blow. I anticipate a great demand for it as soon as its merits become known. The specification of this patent is the spring work of the chair, with the connecting boot. J. C. HRAITHWAIT BOGARDUS, Louisville, April 8.

The following process is said to be effective in detecting sulphuric acid in vinegar: Boil a few grains of starch with an ounce or two of the suspected vinegar for a few minutes in a glass vessel; when it has become cold, add a drop of the tincture of iodine. If the vinegar contains no sulphuric acid, a beautiful blue color will be produced by the reaction of the iodine on the starch. But if a small quantity of sulphuric acid be present, no color will be developed, for the acid will have changed the starch to dextrin, which is not colored by iodine.

HENRY WARD BEECHER returned home from his Western tour with twelve thousand dollars, the net profit of seventeen lectures. Yet Nilsson and Lucas do far better than that.

Masonry in Persia.

Of the Persian officers who are at present in Berlin pursuing military studies and making themselves acquainted with Prussian military organization and arrangements, one belongs to the Masonic order. He is a Musulman. He seems to have spontaneously sought recognition as a member of the craft in a Berlin Lodge, and his claim was only allowed after such an examination as satisfied the brethren that he was one of them. It appears from the statement of this Persian Mason that nearly all the male members of the Persian Court belong to the mystic order, even as German Masonry enjoys the honor of counting the Emperor and Crown Prince among its adherents. The appearance of this Mohammedan Mason in Berlin seems to have excited a little surprise among some of the brethren there, and the surprise would be natural enough to persons not aware of the extent to which Masonry has been diffused over the earth. Account for it as one may, the truth is certain that the mysterious order was established in the Orient many ages ago. Nearly all of the old Mohammedan buildings in India, as tombs, mosques, etc., are marked with the Masonic symbols, and many of these structures, still perfect, were built in the time of the Mogul Emperor Akbar, who died in 1605. Thus, Masonry must have been introduced into India from Middle Asia by the Mohammedans hundreds of years ago. Indeed, we have heard a reverend member of the order affirm that the religious or theistic idea upon which Masonry is founded has its most perfect architectural embodiment, not in a Christian church, but in a Mohammedan mosque.

What Habits Men and Women Weigh.

Somebody who has been "studying our weights" reports that upon the average, boys weigh a little more and girls a little less than six pounds and a half at birth. For the first twelve years of weight, but beyond that time males acquire a decided preponderance. Thus, young men of twenty average one hundred and forty-three pounds each, while young women of twenty average one hundred and twenty-seven. Men reach their heaviest bulk at about thirty-five, when their average is one hundred and fifty-two pounds; but women slowly increase in weight until fifty, when their average is one hundred and twenty-nine pounds. Taking men and women together, their weight at full growth averages about twenty times as heavy as they were on the first day of their existence. Men range from one hundred and eight to two hundred and twenty pounds, and women from eighty-eight to two hundred and seven pounds. The average weight of human nature, taking the average of all ages and conditions—nobles, clergy, tilters, maidens, boys, girls, and babies included—is very nearly one hundred pounds. These figures are given in avoirdupois weight; but the advocates of the superiority of women might make a nice point by introducing the rule that women be weighed by Troy weight, like other jewels, and men by avoirdupois. The figures would then stand: young men of twenty, one hundred and forty-three pounds each; young women of twenty, one hundred and sixty pounds, and so on.

GERMAN PROVERBS.

When the stomach is full the heart is glad. Were every one to sweep before his own house, every street would be clean. Poor folks' wisdom goes for little. When two men quarrel both are in the wrong. Nobility of soul is more honorable than nobility of birth. Patience surpasses learning. The richest man, whatever his lot, is he who is content with what he has. Money is power, money rules the world. God pays at the end. God gives birds their food, but they must fly for it. Great talkers are little doers. The best goods are the cheapest. Better beg than steal. It is easy to be liberal out of another man's purse. In prosperity, caution; in adversity, patience. Proverbs are the daughters of daily experience. What costs nothing is worth nothing. If fools eat nothing, corn would be cheap. Heavy purses and light hearts can sustain much. Silence answers much.

The first exclamation of a belle on entering the Cathedral at Milan was, "Oh! what a church to get married in."

A Victim of Intemperance.

To-day there is a man going about the streets of this city, ragged, dirty, and penniless, subsisting on free lunches and the charity of gamblers, and has not slept in a bed for months, who, during the war, was one of the most daring cavalry officers in the Union army, and was promoted from the rank of First Lieutenant to full Brigadier and Brevet Major General, for brilliant exploits on the field of battle, and who for a long time had a large and important command.

He has been here for two or three months under an assumed name, being ashamed to dim the brilliancy of his record in the service of his country by an exhibition of his degradation. He is very reticent, having little to do with any one, and talking but little save when "engineering" for a drink, at which he is remarkably successful.

Night before last, while lying helplessly drunk in the rear part of a Third-street saloon, some men thought to play a joke on him by stealing his shirt, and proceeded to strip him. Underneath his shirt, and suspended by a string around his neck, was a small canvas bag, which the men opened and found it to contain his commission as Brevet Major General; two congratulatory letters, one from President Lincoln and one from Grant; a photograph of a little girl, and a curl of hair—a "sobriety shadow" that doubtless one day crept over the brow of some loved one. When these things were discovered, even the half-drunken men who found them felt a respect for the man's former greatness and pity for his fallen condition, and quietly returned the bag and contents to where they found them, and replaced the sleeper's clothes upon him.

Yesterday a reporter tried to interview the man and endeavor to learn something of his life in the past few years, but he declined to communicate anything. He cried like a child when told how his right name and former position had been ascertained, and, with tears trickling down his cheeks, said: "For God's sake, sign, don't publish my degradation, or my name, at least, if you are determined to say something about it. It is enough that I know myself how low I have become. Will you promise that much?" He will do no good, but will cause my friends a great deal of harm; as, fortunately, they think I lived in South America, where I went at the close of the war. Intemperance and the gaming-table have wrought my ruin."—Kansas City News.

Steam on the Farm.

We recently published an engraving of an English steam moving-machine, which, for its simplicity, has attracted much attention. Something has been done in the same line in this country. A correspondent suggests that there is an extensive demand for small portable steamers for farm use, with attachments to render them applicable to various purposes. For example, such machines should be capable of use in working mowers and reapers in lieu of horses; of driving plows, seeders, harrows, saws, grinders, flouring-stones, straw-cutters, threshing-machines, pumps, drawing wagons on common roads, pulling stumps, operating ditching-machines, etc. Here is a field for the ingenious.

The application of steam to farm labor is at present in its infancy. One of the first requisites for its general introduction will be the instruction of farmers in the principles and economies of the steam engine—studies that are at present almost wholly neglected in our common schools.—Scientific American.

The Bloom of Age.

A good woman never grows old. Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence and virtue dwell in her heart, she is as cheerful as when the spring of life first opened to her view. When we look upon a good woman we never think of her age; she looks as charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed upon her cheek. That rose has not faded yet; it never will fade. In the neighborhood she is the friend and benefactor. Who does not respect and love the woman who has passed her days in acts of kindness and mercy? We respect such a woman can not grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirits, and active in humble deeds of mercy and benevolence. If the young lady desires to retain the bloom and beauty of youth, let her not yield to the away of fashion and folly; let her love truth and virtue, and to the close of her life she will retain those feelings which will make life appear a garden of sweets, ever fresh and ever new.

A SAVANT, Dr. Struthers, has been making a special study of the bones of whales, and has discovered that the unfortunate leviathans are subject to rheumatism. Considering how much each of them must have, if they have it at all, and considering further that the cold water treatment can't do them much good, we think that the rheumatic whales must experience a sense of relief when they find themselves mortally harpooned.

Value of Trotting Horses.

The calendar for 1872 has not yet been made up, but will show an increase upon that of 1871, from which we gather some facts. It shows that in 1871 there were 1,586 trotting and pacing races in the United States, representing over a million dollars, in premiums and purses, beside the great value of the horses. The horses would average $1,000 each, and not less than three to each race, which would be $4,728,000, say about $5,000,000 in horses alone, who have actually trotted in the several contests during that year. From this and other reliable data, we calculate the value of these in training and exercising, but not contending in races, and those in the breeding studs, all united, would amount to not less than $18,000,000, being the sum invested in this country in trotting and pacing horses alone. Yet this grand total is confined to a limited number of breeders, as compared to the number of those who have the means, but who will not breed horses of improved stock, nor breed horses at all. We mention this fact as a conclusive argument to prove the immense amount of wealth that is lost to our farmers because of their want of energy and enterprise in not availing themselves to a greater extent of this profitable source of revenue. Every farmer should breed horses. As it is, only a few breed, and most of them raise only a colt or so annually, from inferior parents, and half starve the colt until it is fit to "break," and then by a rapid process they break it true enough; so that the time and cost is literally thrown away. A little more time, trouble, and cost of feed would produce a colt, from a highly-bred sire and a good dam, worth $400 or $500. Two such colts per year would be equal, to many farmers, to the net profits of their entire farms.—Maryland Farmer.

Importance of Reading.

No matter how obscure the position in life of an individual, if he can read, he may at will put himself in the best society the world has ever seen. He may converse with the greatest heroes of the past; with all the writers in prose and poetry. He may learn how to live, how to avoid the errors of his predecessors, and to secure blessings, present and future, to himself. He may reside in a desert, far away from the habitations of man; in solitude, where no human eye looks upon him with affection or interest, where no human voice cheers him with its animating tones, if he has books to read he can never be alone. He may choose his company, and the subject of conversation, and thus become contented and happy, intelligent, wise, and good. Young people should heed these truths.

SHEFFIELD, it is said, is about to give the world a greater benefactor than Watts. The price of coal has been one of the great questions of the hour in England, and the probable exhaustion of the coal-fields has made those interested in posterity very uncomfortable. Now a substitute is promised, and one, too, of which there is an unlimited supply. Mr. Wright's invention for warming and lighting is already patented. In passing through a charged battery atmospheric air is carbonized, and this combustible gas is produced, which burns brighter than coal gas, and when mixed with air has a heating power which can melt copper wire.

Important to Colored Soldiers.

The following circular was addressed to Hon. M. J. Durham, M. C. and published in the Kentucky Advocate of last week. If there are any negroes in this section who are interested in this matter, this circular will instruct them how to proceed:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, March 28, 1873.
To the Hon. M. J. Durham, M. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that all Colored Soldiers, or Sailors, or their legal representatives, who have received notice from the Treasury Department that certificates have been issued in settlement of their claims for pay, bounty, prize money, etc., and who have not received the amounts due them, can now be paid promptly, without further expense to claimants, so soon as this office shall have learned the post-office address. Therefore, I respectfully request that you will inform claimants within your reach, and request them to send their names, with post-office address, and the designation of the company and regiment in which the service was rendered, to the Adjutant General, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

It should be distinctly understood that a claimant need not send his name, &c., unless he or she shall have been notified from the Treasury Department that a certificate in his or her favor has been issued, this office not having to do with cases prior to that action.

Your aid in the matter, as indicated, will not only benefit the colored claimants, but prove advantageous to the public service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant General.

The New Game Law.

The game law recently passed by the Legislature of Kentucky provides that it shall be unlawful to kill any female deer in the months of March, April, May, June, July, or August; that it shall be unlawful for any person at any place other than upon his own premises to kill, or injure, or pursue with such intent, any bird smaller than a quail, except the hawk, snipe, or plover, or birds of prey, or such as are destructive to the grain or fruit crops; that it shall be unlawful, in the months of March, April, May, June, July, August, or September, in any year, to catch, kill, or in any way or manner destroy, or pursue with such intent, any quail, partridge, or pheasant; that it shall be unlawful, in the months of May, June, July, or August, or the first half of September in any year, to catch, kill, or pursue with any such intent, any wild goose, wood-duck, teal, or other duck; that it shall be unlawful, in the months of January, February, March, April, or May, in any year, to catch or kill, or pursue with such intent, any wood-cock. Proper penalties are annexed for the violation of any of the provisions of the law.

DANVILLE, on the Tennessee river, has taken itself to the production of gigantic skeletons. On the river bank there had recently been a slide, the skeletons of some forty or fifty persons, some of them of extraordinary size, have been discovered. Nearly all of them are over seven feet in length, and evidently belonged to a race of men who inhabited the country prior to the Indian. Skeleton mines, however, we should think more likely to be interesting than useful.

ONE of the most important points in window gardening is watering. There should be plenty of cracks in the bottom of the pot, so as to let the water pass off rapidly, and thus insure perfect drainage. This is one of the few rules without any exception, as there is not a single plant suitable for window culture which will flourish if the water be allowed to stagnate in the bottom of the pot.

TOMATOES, sliced and placed on the steak as it broils, make a splendid relish; and sliced in half, covered with rolled crackers, placed in a dripping pan with a spoonful of butter, and seasoned to the taste, then baked for two hours, make a dish fit for—an editor and other sensible humans.
